

FIVE CENTS

BRANDON, MAN.

A Tale of a Cowboy

Punchions of rum and other spirits, boxes of wood, planks of mahogany and pine, oars, broken masts, coils of rope, tangles of running rigging, flags of all nations, and articles of such material as is used on shipboard, swinging tables, stoves, swinging lamps, masthead lanterns, and hammocks; enough, and to spare, in short, to fit out a small fleet of vessels. Lost in amazement, Brinkley examined this extraordinary hoard, the accumulation, doubtless, of many years. The mail bag lay upon a large canvas bag, rotten with age and vermin. It was as full as it could hold of pieces of gold, bearing the superscription of the mint of Spain.

"I don't know,"

"Following day—praps!" she said.

"Ah," returned the young man, assuming his flippant manner. "You find me a very uncompanying 1 fear. The fact is, I am generally affected in this manner in the present state of the moon. But come to-morrow, Matt. Your presence does me good."

However, the next day passed and the next again, and there was no sign of Matt. He began to think the child had taken offense, and that he would have to seek her in her own home, when her opportune appearance prevented the journey. He was taking his breakfast one morning inside the Caravan, when few things to him the amiable gentleman may think of becoming just.

He called up Tim and sent him on
